

Irish Journal of Anthropology Newsletter – EthnoGraph, Welcome and Introduction

Welcome to EthnoGraph, the Irish Journal of Anthropology's Monthly Newsletter. EthnoGraph is a new addition to the Journal and we envisage that its scope and range will bring together junior and established academics from around the world. We will publish EthnoGraph each month, providing an opportunity to develop research and personal thoughts on current and emerging issues relevant to our global communities. In line with the aims of the Irish Journal of Anthropology (IJA), while we seek to foreground Irish Anthropology, the Journal and EthnoGraph's remit encourages submissions which promote anthropological writing from our global colleagues. We encourage creative submissions around ethnographic research, anthropology conference reports, current academic and social issues. For example, photographic essays, poetry, creative prose or other artistic interpretations. We are keen to promote interdisciplinary dialogue between anthropology and other disciplines to incorporate a wide range of topics and issues from home (Ireland) and around the globe. The Newsletter will publish a variety of writing, both "traditional" and creative.

Authors can submit a short abstract of 100 words to EthnoGraph's editors, whatever the stage in their academic career. Full pieces should be around 1,000 words and follow the author guidelines of the Irish Journal of Anthropology excluding the Journal's wordcount. Short abstracts for consideration can be sent to EthnoGraph's editors at – IJA.Newsletter@gmail.com

We look forward to a vibrant and thoughtful IJA Newsletter.

Ashwin, Xinyi, and Tom

- Ashwin Tripathi is a PhD scholar in Humanities and Social Sciences at IIT Gandhinagar (India). Her research interest lies at the intersection of social gerontology, anthropology, and Leisure Studies.
- Xinyi Wu is a PhD Candidate at the University of Edinburgh. She investigates the social integration of connected and automated vehicles in the UK.
- Tom Marshall is a PhD Candidate at Queen's University, Belfast. His research considers Eastern European's and their mental health.